Is Homelessness the Cost of Living?

Editor:

The reason for homelessness is clear to see, but no one wants to look ("Homing the Houseless," Feb. 25). Housing here is too ridiculously expensive for a place that has no economy. Unless you have skills or connections there are no jobs that pay enough to keep a roof over your head and you have to be a millionaire to get welfare in the USA now. If you're mentally ill, good luck. Or is it because watching the poor suffer makes people feel better about themselves that things go on this way?

Humboldt County is in a state of emergency, not because of the weather, but because the USA is now a third world country. Especially in the winter, the Muni or the Adorni Center, the Veteran's Building or some of the many vacant commercial buildings should be opened for homeless people. Let alone churches and temples. If the weather or an earthquake made people homeless, they'd be open for people.

Campsites, jail and tiny houses (sub-standard housing) are cruel solutions. The progressive, Christian state of Utah since 2009 has ended homelessness and is saving money at the same time by providing housing similar to Section 8 without a five-year waiting line.

I've been here since the '70s and wages have doubled since then, but housing has gone up tenfold! If you are not good at math, that's a lot more. There was plenty of poverty, but housing was cheap. The fish are gone and the big money trees are gone and the operations that remain are

The Nothing

Fog came ashore and erased the landscape. The Pacific Ocean faded to a band of foam where waves still managed to reach the slate gray sand.

Standing on the ridge overlooking Agate Beach, I saw the sheer bluff melt into light gray immateriality.

A couple on the beach walked straight into the fog's embrace and disappeared.

I was alone in the world.

Would the erasing force reach my feet, my legs, my heart?

I knew why the fog happened.

I knew nothing would happen to me.

Not there, at least. Not then.

Yet, I was like a child dreaming of being in the fantasy novel she had just read, in which The Nothing advanced and erased the world.

I saw The Nothing. I felt it, as a cool blade of breeze drew the outline of my spine.

Would I wake up in a different universe to realize I had been dreaming the Earth, the ocean, my life?

I jogged away from the lookout, towards the park's exit.

The fog gained ground behind me.

more mechanized and need fewer people.

Since the '80s the War on Poverty has turned into the War on Poor People. Maybe the poor just need grant writers? How about rent control? Ha ha. Just keep adding onto our debtor's prison (county jail), I guess.

You Say Pupusa, I Say Yum

Editor:

Thanks to Jada Calypso Brotman for the shout-out to pupusas in her Feb. 25 column ("Table Talk") — truly one of the best foods one can eat. However, just want to make sure you get the spelling right next time — pupusas, not "papusas." I spent six months living in El Salvador and gained 10 pounds in that short time, mostly due to those delicious things, so I know!

Mendo Growers Push Initiative

Fearing they may be left behind, Tim Blake and company take matters into their own hands

By Adrian Fernandez Baumann

The North Coast's long journey toward cannabis legalization moves at an unpredictable pace, often marching steadily forward, sometimes slowing to a crawl and occasionally stumbling ahead in a Three Stooges-esque melee. But the future is inscrutable, and today's bickering can become tomorrow's productive exchange of ideas as this week's scramble gives way to next month's stately march.

Whatever the direction, some kind of movement happened in Mendocino County last week when a new political group, the Mendocino Heritage Initiative Committee (MHIC), filed a grower-friendly ballot initiative with the county clerk. Hoping to do an end run around the county board of supervisors, whose efforts to craft a new ordinance have progressed at a leisurely (some say reluctant) pace, a familiar team of Mendo canna-activists retained prominent North Coast attorney Omar Figueroa to draft the initiative language. The initiative must now meet the scrutiny of county counsel before signature gathering can begin. Then, if the group can muster 2,502 signatures from registered Mendocino voters by mid June, the initiative will become a measure on the November ballot.

Back in January of 2015, the Mendocino County Board of Supervisors appointed two of its own, Tom Woodhouse and John McCowen, to a marijuana ad hoc committee, and tasked them with bringing back recommendations for a land use ordinance. Both men now say they are within a couple weeks of announcing their proposal, making actual ratification of a new ordinance possible as soon as next month. But growers have expressed worries about the speed and content of the still-secret proposal.

So with Emerald Cup founder and cannabis industry stalwart Tim Blake as its most prominent co-chair, MHIC officially launched its initiative effort at a Feb. 26 event in Ukiah, complete with speeches, a live band, a farm-to-table dinner and locally brewed kombucha. "We just watched Santa Rosa pass a very forward thinking policy," Blake told a crowd, introducing the initiative. "We've watched Humboldt do the same thing. ... I don't want to have us blow it up — that's not what it's about — it's about us just having a fair chance to compete with our neighboring counties, that are, at this point, going to be growing about 10 times as much cannabis as we are."

The initiative, which runs 74 pages, attempts to define and regulate a legal marijuana market in compliance with the state's new Medical Marijuana Regulation and Safety Act (MMRSA). It would create a tiered system of licenses based on canopy size, ranging from a "micro-business" of 2,500 square feet or less, to a tier of between 10,001 square feet and one acre, with each tier subject to varying regulations. The initiative language also includes extensive provisions for other kinds of cannabis-related activity, including extraction, dispensaries, nurseries and transportation.

Though it would create new regulations, the initiative would also grandfather in many growers, allowing those currently cultivating certain grace periods to come into compliance. It would also define cannabis cultivation as an agricultural activity, create a system of appellations, much like in the wine industry, and create some new environmental regulations.

MHIC spokesperson Sarah Bodnar said the initiative would also provide additional revenue to the county through a 2.5 percent business tax on gross medical cannabis receipts. She also pointed out that it would bridge a gap in MMRSA by allowing for local transportation between licensed entities. She said it would also protect local growers and businesses by mandating at least two years of county residency to hold a majority ownership in a marijuana business.

In an interview with the Journal, McCowen expressed some trepidation about the initiative. "Frankly, I'm looking at something that is more balanced, that also protects the community and the environment, rather than just accommodates the perceived needs of the growers," he said. "I want Mendocino County to be known for something besides marijuana."

McCowen said he thinks the local marijuana industry has actually discouraged other kinds of economic development, luring in young people who might otherwise go to college or master some other trade or skill. "Though a lot of [marijuana] money circulates in a community, there are other factors that, if you add them up, I'm not sure we're really coming out ahead," he said.

McCowen also shared some of the details of what his ad hoc committee will be presenting to the supes. In broad strokes, he said the committee will recommend a three-tiered structure based on mature plant count, with varying levels of inspections required. The recommendation would also restrict cultivation to mostly non-residentially zoned areas. The first tier, from one to 25 plants, would see no significant changes from the current system, with the exception of perhaps some new environmental requirements.

The next tier, 25 to 50 plants, would require an application process, a couple site visits by third party inspectors and the purchase of zip-ties. These first two tiers would be administered by the county agricultural commissioner. A third tier, of up to 99 plants, would require an additional inspection and be administered by the sheriff's department, with more stringent zoning restrictions. The sheriff would also have the power to cap the total number of permits for large grows.

Even if MHIC's initiative reaches the ballot, McCowen is skeptical it can pass. Woodhouse, for his part, said he sees some benefit in the matter coming before voters. "I think that's where the decision should be made — in the voters' hands," he said.

Acknowledging his respect for the supervisor, Blake has used McCowen's skepticism as a call to arms. "He's bet that we can't write a well-written proposal and an initiative that can get passed, and so we're going to take him up on the wager," he said at the launch party. But MHIC leaders have indicated they really hope to avoid a vote altogether and will urge the supervisors to take up the initiative themselves.

It's also worth noting that the timing of the November election could play a decisive role in deciding the initiative's fate. November is trim season, and that means an influx of potentially pro-initiative voters. Staff at the Mendocino County Clerk's office confirmed that these individuals, so-called "trimmigrants," will be eligible to vote in the county elections if they are American citizens and register in time. This could tip the ballot box in favor of the MHIC initiative. At the very least, it has the potential to make for an unusually intense election season in Mendocino County. ●

Will Eureka Get a Sanctioned Homeless Camp?

By Linda Stansberry

linda@northcoastjournal.com

Eureka has struggled with what to do with the sprawling community of homeless people camped behind the Bayshore Mall for more than a year. With construction due to begin on a waterfront trail this spring, the more than 100 people currently living in the Palco Marsh may soon have to leave. Mayor Frank Jager acknowledged the time-crunch in a surprise speech delivered at the close of the March 1 city council meeting, dropping the mic (well, banging the gavel) after startling the audience with an unanticipated request to the council: Talk to city staff and come back with a proposal for a temporary sanctuary camp in early April.

"I've been concerned about this for some time, it's something I didn't think I'd be in favor of but, looking into the future, I've seen some serious problems for the city, so I want to come forward," Jager said. He added that he has confidence that the Housing First strategy endorsed by consultancy group Focus Strategies will work, but this longer-range plan is insufficient to address the immediate need of those currently sleeping rough on city property.

"I don't want to have to go in May and dump all of these people out of the marsh and have them sleeping in the doorways and the alleys and the residential areas," he said, speaking to the concerns of many home and business owners.

Jager made it clear that the city would not be financially responsible for the camp except for potentially leasing land and providing toilets and Dumpsters. Responsibility for operating and maintaining the camp would fall to a nonprofit.

This announcement was a pleasant surprise to Nezzie Wade, president of Affordable Homeless Housing Alternatives. AHHA has been advocating for a sanctioned camp of some sort for more than a year — either a tent city like Camp Quixote in Washington, or a small house village, like Opportunity Village in Eugene, Oregon. The Eureka City Council first discussed these options in December of 2014, but no progress on the subject has been made for the past year, as councilmembers and staff have butted heads and batted around ideas about forcibly removing all campers from the marsh, providing services to people in the marsh, shrinking the footprint of those in the marsh, confiscating the property of those in the marsh, and (after declaring a shelter crisis) moving those in the marsh into city-owned buildings.

Of those many approaches, a handful have actually been implemented: The footprint was shrunk (the Eureka Police Department moved campers into a smaller area), resource fairs now occur monthly and — after a very public show of frustration by councilmember Linda Atkins — the city formally declared a shelter crisis, which relaxes some of the regulations around creating emergency shelters.

Meanwhile, Wade and the AHHA board have been drumming up grassroots support for their cause, inviting the public to view a model tiny house village in September and holding monthly meetings to discuss the ongoing issues faced by those in Humboldt with "no legal place to be." AHHA's credo is "safe, warm and dry first," with the philosophy that once a person is sheltered, he or she can go on to thrive in the continuum of care, utilizing resources to address issues such as drug abuse and mental illness.

On March 7, AHHA held a press conference to roll out its proposal for a sanctuary camp. Several Eureka city councilmembers and county supervisors were present.

"We've been on this trail for a very long time," Wade said to the diverse crowd packed into the St. Vincent DePaul dining room on Eureka's West Third Street. The conference included a Powerpoint presentation by Wade, diagrams of model camps and a question and answer period.

Questions ranged from enthusiastic to dubious. Who would be allowed in the camps? (All who are homeless, on a first come, first serve basis.) Will there be residency requirements? (No.) Will dogs be allowed? (Yes.) What about drugs? (Yes, just not within common areas.) And who will be paying for it all?

This last question prompted a stutter in the well-oiled presentation until an AHHA board member chimed in to say the residents would contribute to the utility costs of the camp. (Other models have the residents paying $30 a month to cover sewer and water.) With land, portable toilets and Dumpsters provided by the city, the only remaining costs would be set-up and staff time. But these costs are not static, the size of the camp is not uniform, and the funding for costs unmet by resident contributions is not certain.

For one thing, although a "pilot project” for Eureka’s soon-to-be-displaced would be the first order of business, the nonprofit hopes to address a county-wide problem with villages across the region, which means negotiating a variety of jurisdictional hurdles. The ideal size for a camp, according to Wade, is 25 to 30 people, and in order to meet the spectrum of needs present in the homeless community (some may need to be in a drug-free environment, sex offenders could not camp in the same area as families), many different types of camps or villages might be necessary. While Eureka might be able to find one or two parcels exempt from Coastal Zone protection (the area behind Target has been suggested), many other likely locations are privately owned and may not be accessible via public transportation or by people with disabilities, as one man in the audience said his wheelchair-bound wife, currently living in the marsh, needed.

AHHA has received some small grants, but it appears as though it will be fiscally reliant on approval of Measure Z funding, for which it has submitted three applications: one for a safe parking program ($56,000), one for a model sanctuary camp ($55,548) and one for a tiny house village ($63,933). In the budget included with the application, it estimates around $20,000 in one-time costs and $35,000 in fixed costs to operate for one year, with the bulk of operational costs going toward a full-time staff member. Wade said volunteers and residents will cover staffing gaps to ensure the sites are overseen 24/7.

Despite the recent climate change in council chambers, it’s unclear whether Wade’s seeds are falling on fertile soil. Councilmember Kim Bergel, who attended the press conference, questioned Wade on the camps’ lack of an “exit plan.” Jager’s call clearly delineated the need for any sanctuary camp to be temporary. Wade responded to Bergel’s question by saying that the exit plan would be “people-focused,” meaning residents would leave when they were ready.

A quasi-permanent sanctuary camp seems unlikely to gain support in either the city or county, as both the city council and board of supervisors have pledged support for the Housing First strategy, which discourages the diversion of resources into temporary solutions. Supervisor Virginia Bass broached the need for a shared philosophy during the March 1 board of supervisors meeting, saying that if the issue of a sanctuary camp were raised that night in the city council meeting, she would stand up and say it risked sacrificing the board of supervisors’ support for their mutual Housing First goal. Like many, she was surprised by Jager’s reversal, but said that after “digesting” the news she came to peace with the idea, with the understanding the camp would be temporary. The board approved a joint resolution in support of the Housing First strategy without comment on March 8.

“I don’t think the sanctuary camp is helpful towards ending the challenges of homelessness,” said Bass. “I think it’s putting it off. At the same time, I have to respect that the city feels they need to do something, and working together means sometimes you’re not going to agree, but as long as you have an understanding you have to move forward.”

Not Feelin' the Bern

By Grant Scott-Goforth

Marijuana advocates are not donating money to presidential campaigns at anywhere near the level of other causes, according to a recent International Business Times report.

The article starts by detailing how little marijuana groups have donated to Bernie Sanders — who's advocated for legalization on the campaign trail — compared to Rand Paul, the one-time Republican candidate who's also backed marijuana reform and who hauled in $24,500 in donations at a single 2015 fundraising event in Colorado. Sanders has received $1,000 from board members of prominent national marijuana advocacy groups.

Other lobbyists — for gun rights, alcohol and gay rights organizations — spent millions on the 2012 election. During the same cycle, the Times reports, marijuana groups spent $40,000 on presidential candidates.

The report floats several theories as to the lack of presidential candidate spending (we'll ignore the obvious joke here). First, marijuana advocates have a long history of getting medical and recreational marijuana passed on the state level, and that appears to be where the vast majority of campaign spending on the subject still lies. Still, as one expert pointed out, states where legalization has taken hold in the last several years are largely relying on executive memos urging Justice Department leniency on state-authorized marijuana; a new president could erode that tenuous support.

Another reason for the lack of presidential donating, the article surmises, is that the marijuana movement is “far from flush in cash” and lacking in affluent support. From a first glance inside the Emerald Triangle, that seems silly — we've seen an industry plenty flush in cash, and there's reason to believe growers vote against legalization knowing that prohibition is the very thing keeping their profit margins sky-high. It's also easy to imagine that the pot operations flourishing in Denver, Seattle and Portland have tightened their campaign purse strings since legalization took hold in their respective states. After all, the battle there is won, and pot-tourism is an undeniable moneymaker.

Still, while marijuana profits soar, there's little in the way of a unified national industry like big alcohol has built over decades. And on a national scale, it makes sense that marijuana legalization doesn't register high on the scale of timely causes. Medical marijuana has a foothold in nearly half the nation, and recreational marijuana doesn't have the social justice imperative that, say, same-sex marriage carries. And while the criminal justice system unevenly punishes minorities for marijuana crimes — justifying long overdue decriminalization — that's probably not much of a pet cause for the nation's affluent campaign donors.

In a first-of-its-kind move, Arcata medical marijuana dispensary the Humboldt Patient Resource Center recently was named the city's 2016 Business of the Year. The timing is notable — as the city voted recently to enact a business-friendly medical marijuana innovation zone and is looking into track-and-trace software for local cultivators and manufacturers, HPRC is moving quickly to comply with new state regulations while maintaining its standards and place in the community.

The dispensary has its own strict tracking and testing programs, and, according to a nomination for the award submitted by several members of the city's Economic Development Committee, “Humboldt Patient Resource Center is a longstanding member of our community and is internationally recognized within the medicinal cannabis community.”

Congrats.

Run, Hide, Fight

“Don’t ever say it won’t happen here,” said Eureka Police Capt. Brian Stephens, who led a training on active shooter situations to a packed audience at the Sequoia Conference Center on March 3. The presentation, which included several training videos and a demonstration with volunteers from the Eureka Boys and Girls Club, had practical advice for those who might face an active shooter in their school, place of work or public gathering. Although Humboldt County has not experienced an active shooter situation, Stephens was careful to point out that even smaller communities had been victims of armed shooters intent on killing others.

The presentation included information from Department of Homeland Security guidelines, which encourages those in an active shooter situation to first run away from the assailant, then to hide (turning off cell phone ringers), and finally, if there are no other options, to fight.

“Commit to your actions,” said Stephens. “You have to do it with everything you have inside of you. Everybody has to act in unison.”

He added that chairs, tables, computer monitors, rolled up magazines and hand sanitizer can all be used as weapons, and that fire extinguishers, sprayed directly on a person’s face, can take a shooter’s breath and vision away.

EPD dispatcher Katie Hill also gave advice on how to report an incident.

In a private interview, EPD Chief Andy Mills said that he had received criticism for not shutting down schools during a recent shoot-out between district attorney investigators and a fugitive that took place close to Zoe Barnum Elementary. His response was that, like most incidents, it was over within five minutes. Balancing safety with the emotional health of students is a challenge, he said.

“I don’t want children being fearful every time they walk into their school,” Mills said.

While the Department of Homeland Security’s active shooter response instructions specify that you should fight “as a last resort, and only when your life is in imminent danger,” both Stephens and Mills said that whether or not those with concealed carry permitted guns approach and engage a shooter is an individual choice. They pointed out the difficulty of hitting a moving target (who might be wearing body armor) at a great distance and the fact that arriving officers will be looking for anyone with a weapon.

According to the presentation, only five of 150 active shooter incidents were ended by civilians firing on attackers. While Mills suspects Second Amendment rights supporters would argue that means more citizens should be armed, he says that ultimately, “we don’t know. ... We don’t have the data.”

Admonished and under investigation, two respected local judges now stand as symbols of a courthouse in crisis

By Thadeus Greenson

Illustrations by Christian Pennington

Two of the most respected judges in Humboldt County could face criminal charges depending on the outcome of a California Attorney General's Office review of allegations that they submitted false affidavits to the state in order to receive their salaries.

The review — conducted at the request of Humboldt County District Attorney Maggie Fleming — follows a pair of public admonishments issued by the Commission on Judicial Performance, the state body tasked with the oversight and discipline of the state's nearly 2,000 judges. The admonishments — issued to Humboldt County Superior Court judges Dale Reinholtsen and Christopher Wilson — are in and of themselves a big deal. The commission fields some 1,200 complaints a year but metes out discipline, ranging from private advisory letters to removing judges from offices, in only 40 or so cases annually. Reinholtsen and Wilson are the only Humboldt County judges to be publicly disciplined by the commission since its formation in 1960.

But while the admonishments constitute black marks that threaten to forever stain Wilson and Reinholtsen's careers, they've been met with mixed reactions in the Humboldt County Courthouse, in large part because the judges are widely considered thoughtful, thorough and hard working. Some see the admonishments as the result of a "crushing" and unrealistic caseload and a courthouse in crisis. Others concede that may be true, but argue it doesn't excuse allegedly signing sworn affidavits that proved to be false. And there is universal concern over what the admonishments will mean for the future of the Humboldt County bench, which already has one vacancy and four more expected in the coming years.

The allegations against Reinholtsen and Wilson stem from a provision in the California constitution that requires the state's judges to decide matters submitted to them within 90 days. The Legislature later codified the constitutional provision by requiring judges to submit affidavits to the state swearing that they don’t have any matters pending before them that are more than 90 days old in order to receive their paychecks. If they have a backlog of decisions, the state withholds their salaries until they’ve cleared their desks of delinquent matters.

“The law’s the law. I personally think it’s kind of a dumb, draconian rule. But a rule’s a rule.”

The Commission on Judicial Performance alleged in public admonishments — the first issued to Reinholtsen in September and the second to Wilson in January — that both judges repeatedly signed the affidavits while they had delinquent decisions pending and that both illegally received their salaries from the state on numerous occasions. Specifically, Reinholtsen is alleged to have decided 20 matters past the 90-day deadline, signed false affidavits seven times and illegally received his salary 13 times over the course of several years. The commission alleged Wilson signed eight false salary affidavits and received his salary on six occasions when it should have been withheld under the law. In aggravation, the commission noted that Wilson was privately admonished for similar behavior back in 2007, when he allegedly decided seven cases more than 160 days after they were submitted to him and signed false salary affidavits on three occasions.

University of California Hastings College of Law professor David Levine said the 90-day rule is not without controversy. Some argue it’s a harsh rule that limits judges’ abilities to issue thoughtful, well-researched rulings, especially in jurisdictions with heavy caseloads, Levine said. In the state’s higher courts, Levine said, some feel the rule has undercut the importance of oral arguments, as the courts won’t schedule the hearings — in which attorneys get their only chance to plead their cases in person — until the court’s justices have already reached a tentative ruling. While Levine said some, including himself, are critical of the rule, it clearly serves to prevent case backlogs and the possibility of decisions pending indefinitely.

“The law’s the law. I personally think it’s kind of a dumb, draconian rule. But a rule’s a rule,” Levine said.

Locally, the situation is largely seen as a murky one. Dustin Owens, president of the Humboldt chapter of the California State Bar Association, said the matter was brought up at a recent meeting and the association’s members debated whether to make a public statement on the matter, whether it be condemning the judges’ actions or defending them. There was no consensus. “When you have 30 lawyers in a room, you can’t get them to agree on anything,” Owens said. Owens said he personally feels the admonishments were “kind of unfair” to two extremely hard-working judges. “From the people I’ve talked to, the lawyers I’ve talked to, everybody really likes both of the judges that were admonished. They do a good job. And, they probably overwork themselves.”

Those who see the situation as Owens does point out that caseloads in Humboldt County are overwhelming. They note the fact that the state has determined Humboldt needs two additional judges to manage its current caseload, yet has so far refused to fund the new positions. They argue that court is limited by having only seven courtrooms and that it sometimes struggles to keep them all open with a critical staffing shortage. In fact, 21 percent of court operations staff positions are either vacant or were recently eliminated. (Court staff positions are allocated and employed by the state.)

But while the consensus inside and outside of Humboldt is that caseloads are unsustainable, the most recent data available from the state doesn’t entirely bear that out. According to statistics from 2014, the most recent year available, Humboldt ranked 24th out of California's 58 counties for case dispositions for judicial position, with 3,198 per judge. That's a far cry from Imperial County, which ranked dead last with 6,129 dispositions per judge, or Alpine County, where the judges apparently had it pretty easy with just 599 dispositions apiece.

But some caution that those stats are deceiving. Humboldt County judges have minimal support staff, they point out, with only one staff attorney to research case law for all seven judges and a pair of administrative assistants the judges share with the court executive office. Humboldt County also has a disproportionate amount of pending homicide cases, which are lengthy and labor intensive, tying up court rooms for weeks at a time and bogging judges down with flurries of motions and evidentiary hearings.

It's civil cases that often take a back seat, as criminal defendants have a constitutional right to a speedy trial and timely hearings. Local attorney Timothy Needham said he has one civil case that's currently been pending for six years. He said the case has been ready for trial but postponed at its last eight court appearances because there haven't been any courtrooms or judges available.

The consensus of nearly everyone who works in a county courtroom is that Humboldt's caseload is crushing, and only growing. Even the Commission on Judicial Performance pointed to caseload as a potentially mitigating factor in its admonishments of Reinholtsen and Wilson.

Local attorney Bill Verick disagrees, as do others who said they didn't want to be identified criticizing sitting judges. If you pick up the latest copy of the Daily Journal — a legal newspaper — or California Lawyer magazine, Verick said, you'll find lists of lawyers in the back pages who have been disciplined by the California State Bar Association.

"If you read the things that lawyers are most likely to get disbarred for — in other words, it's taken very seriously when they do it — it's lying about money or stealing money, or committing fraud," Verick said. "These judges, what they did is they signed an affidavit that wasn't true. Signing an affidavit that you know is not true; the definition of that is perjury.

"If that's perjury — and that's what it looks like — then it was perjury committed to get paid money that they were not due, and that's called fraud. And fraud to get money over $1,000 is grand theft in California. The state bar is very unforgiving about that kind of behavior in a private lawyer. And I think it's entirely fair to hold a judge to a higher standard."

Verick added that people have been prosecuted for mortgage fraud for failing to disclose that the money used for a down payment was actually a loan from their parents, and he's seen at least one local defendant prosecuted for welfare fraud for a seemingly small violation. Consequently, he isn't sympathetic when people raise judicial caseloads as an excuse for Reinholtsen and Wilson's alleged conduct.

"All I can say is the California constitution says what it says. You can say, 'It's unfair,' but that's what the law is," Verick said. "Judges should obey the law. What do they mean when they say caseload is a mitigating factor? Is it that the caseload is a mitigating factor because the judge is so busy he doesn't know what he's doing? If that were the case, I would agree but I don't think that's what they're saying. I think what they're saying is that it's regrettable but excusable to sign a false affidavit in order to get paid because their caseload is heavy. I don't agree with that. The answer to that is to change the California constitution or the law or to give them more than 90 days or to give the court more judges; it's not to let them sign a false affidavit."

In January, Judge Bruce Watson retired after 23 years on the bench. Though Watson announced the move back in May of last year, Gov. Jerry Brown has yet to appoint a replacement, and it appears he's having some trouble finding a suitable pool of candidates. Owens said he was contacted last month and asked to solicit another round of applications from the local Bar's members. Humboldt hasn't seen a contested judicial election in nearly two decades, since Wilson won his seat in 1998, and it appears being a judge in Humboldt isn't a very desirable position, even with its $179,000 annual salary.

Owens said there's no denying that the pay is good and the health and retirement packages are great, but he quickly added that the position can be isolating. Others pointed said it can also be monotonous and somewhat depressing.

"The job doesn't seem enviable," said one local attorney who declined to be identified. "It's 10 hours a day, and it's very, very repetitive. Plus, it's a pretty crushing workload."

Needham, who represented Reinholtsen before the Commission on Judicial Performance but declined to talk about his specific situation, said the workload also creates morale issues on the bench, noting that its essentially staffed at 75 percent of what it needs, according to the state. "It creates this horrible friction among the judges themselves because nobody can keep up," Needham said, explaining that the additional workload isn't necessarily spread evenly across all judges.

Needham and others said the admonishments of Wilson and Reinholtsen may scare away some considering applying or running for a judgeship. "It happened to the one guy who's working harder than anyone," one Eureka attorney said, referring to Reinholtsen, who numerous attorneys said regularly works weekends.

Kim Bartleson, who took over as Humboldt's court executive officer in October, said she and court management are working diligently to do what they can to smooth operations and bring in reinforcements but much is out of local hands. She said she currently has a line of visiting judges to fill Watson's seat until an appointment is made, which she was told may not be until 2018 (Bartleson said she stressed Humboldt County's "urgent need" to the governor's office). And Bartleson said she is busily filling staff vacancies and getting new hires trained, hoping to at least eliminate the staffing shortage that sometimes contributes to clogged court calendars. (She said the staffing shortage has been so bad at times that it's necessitated closing down courtrooms because she doesn't have clerks to staff them.)

She said she's also researching a pre-tem program that would allow trained local attorneys to sit in as judges on a temporary basis and hear low-level cases. But even if Humboldt County had additional judges, it wouldn't have anywhere permanent to put them. The county and the Judicial Council are discussing a courthouse expansion to build additional courtrooms, but that’s years away under the best case scenario.

And looming on the horizon are four more retirements, as Timothy Cissna, Marilyn Miles, John Feeney and Reinholtsen all have close to 20 years on the bench and are rumored to be mulling hanging up their robes at the end of their current six-year terms. A prolonged vacancy in any of Humboldt’s seven judicial positions could pose some problems. Multiple vacancies at once could be hugely problematic.

Needham said it’s fair to wonder where all these new judges are going to come from. Would he — a well respected local attorney with a lengthy resume — consider throwing his name into contention? He answered without hesitation: “Not in a million years.”

As the Attorney General’s

Office mulls what to do with Reinholtsen and Wilson, it appears Humboldt County’s bench is approaching a critical period, with large changes on the horizon.

Wilson and Reinholtsen declined to be interviewed for this story, as did Presiding Judge Joyce Hinrichs. Attorney General Press Secretary Rachele Huennekens declined to offer any status update on the case, other than to say her office is evaluating the matter. For his part, Levine said he thinks the Attorney General’s Office will take a very careful look at Reinholtsen and Wilson’s cases, though he said it’s hard to know if they will choose to prosecute. If the attorney general were to bring perjury charges, it would have to prove that both men knew their affidavits were false at the time they signed them and that they knew they had delinquent cases. Convictions would be devastating for the judges. Because perjury is considered a crime of moral turpitude, they would not only be removed from office but also disbarred.

Humboldt sits in an unprecedented situation. Since the Commission on Judicial Performance was formed in 1960, it has only publicly reprimanded 17 judges for filing false salary affidavits. Never has it admonished two judges from the same county in a six-month span. Is this evidence of something culturally afoul on the Humboldt bench or just a symptom of an unsustainable workload in a pressure-packed environment? It’s hard to say, but Levine said the admonishments are cause for concern.

“Signing these affidavits, that’s troublesome,” he said. “It’s one thing to miss deadlines, it’s another to sign the affidavits. It’s something of a technical violation. But on the other hand, you’re signing something under the penalty of perjury and, of all people, to a judge that ought to mean something.” ●

Aebleskiver are the new pancakes

By Simona Carini
tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Somehow in my 20 years living in the U.S., I had neither heard of nor met aebleskiver. Last year, a photo I stumbled upon while researching traditional foods of Minnesota put me on a remedial path. Æbleskiver (spelled aebleskiver or ebleskiver in English) are distinctively spherical traditional Danish pancakes.

I am usually wary of adding tools to my kitchen, but in this case curiosity gained the upper hand: I purchased a cast-iron aebleskiver pan. While the batter is straightforward to make, cooking aebleskiver requires some practice. I entrusted my training to online videos. The most useful one is titled “Making Aebleskiver with Arne.” Having navigated the learning curve, I can offer you some tips to make your sailing smoother.

Whenever you learn a new skill, be it making aebleskiver or handmade pasta, I recommend you start small (the ingredients here make a manageable batch for a beginner) and put yourself in a non-hurried situation. Give yourself time and space to practice and make mistakes. Until you are comfortable with the process and its timing, do not wander away from the stove. You want to learn how your pan works and how to adjust the heat to maintain the right temperature. Oil the molds well and do not overfill them; the batter puffs up when heated and if it overflows, turning the aebleskiver will be difficult. Soon enough, you'll get the rhythm and the experience will turn into a little dance — the simple magic of turning fluid batter into a crisp ball.

The recipe on this page is the result of some reading and some testing of a few variations. I cannot say how my version compares to what you would eat in Minnesota or Denmark, but I can say that aebleskiver became an immediate breakfast favorite in our household.

For many people, making pancakes is a Sunday morning ritual that connects them to sweet childhood memories, like standing on a chair next to the stove and watching an adult flip them, or early morning plotting with a sibling to make flapjacks as a surprise for parents still asleep in blissful ignorance. But I don't have any pancake attachments, so it was easy for me to fall in love with aebleskiver without feelings of betrayal. If Sunday pancake breakfast is an unmovable pillar of your life, you can always start a Saturday aebleskiver tradition.

Simona's Aebleskiver

Aebleskiver are best eaten as soon as they are made. Should you have leftovers, re-heat them in the oven before serving. You'll need an aebleskiver pan (with roughly 2-inch-diameter molds) that works well with the type of stovetop you have, a couple of bamboo skewers and a small pastry brush.

Makes 18.

Ingredients and method:

1 large egg, preferably free-range
1 cup plus 1 tablespoon buttermilk or kefir
½ teaspoon vanilla extract
1 ounce whole-wheat pastry flour
3 ½ ounces all-purpose flour
½ tablespoon granulated sugar
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon baking soda
One pinch of salt
1 tablespoon (½ ounce) unsalted butter, melted and cooled
Powdered sugar, for topping

Separate the egg white into a small bowl. Let it stand and come to room temperature. Whisk the yolk and vanilla extract into the buttermilk or kefir. Set aside.

Place all the dry ingredients in a bowl and whisk to aerate and blend them.

Place the aebleskiver pan on the stove and heat up on medium heat. Oil the molds. I use sunflower oil, rather than butter, and a pastry brush to ensure the molds are well oiled (the bristles burn a bit, so I will need to replace the brush at some point).

Beat the egg white until stiff peaks form. Pour the liquid into the bowl with the dry ingredients then add the butter, stirring with a spatula until just combined. Gently fold in 1/3 of the egg white at a time. The batter will not be homogeneous and that's OK.

Pour about 2 tablespoons of batter into each mold. The batter should reach just below the rim. (You may want to do 3 or 4 at a time until you get the hang of it.)

The batter will puff up. When a thin crust has formed on the bottom of each aebleskiver, insert the skewer down into the batter close to the rim until it hits the side of the mold, then slide the aebleskiver up about 1/3 of the way. If the slot was well oiled, the aebleskiver will slide easily. If not, do not force it or you'll tear the crust. Instead, run the tip of the skewer around the inner side of the rim to separate the dough from the pan. The still fluid batter will flow into the freed area of the slot.

When a thin crust has formed again, use the skewer as before to slide each aebleskiver up another 1/3 of the way. Again, the still fluid batter will flow into the empty area of the mold. Finally, use the skewer to roll each aebleskiver forward so that the still crustless section is at the bottom. This ensures the aebleskiver becomes a ball.

Turn the aebleskiver often to ensure even cooking without burning. It takes several minutes. Be patient and stay next to the pan. Adjust the heat if the pan becomes too hot and check for doneness with a toothpick: If it comes out clean, the aebleskiver is ready. Transfer it to a plate.

Oil the empty molds and repeat until all the batter is used. Dust the aebleskiver with powdered sugar and serve with applesauce or fruit preserves. ●

The Extraordinary Voyage of Kamome: A Tsunami Boat Comes Home

Written by Lori Dengler and Amya Miller, designed and illustrated by Amy Uyeki

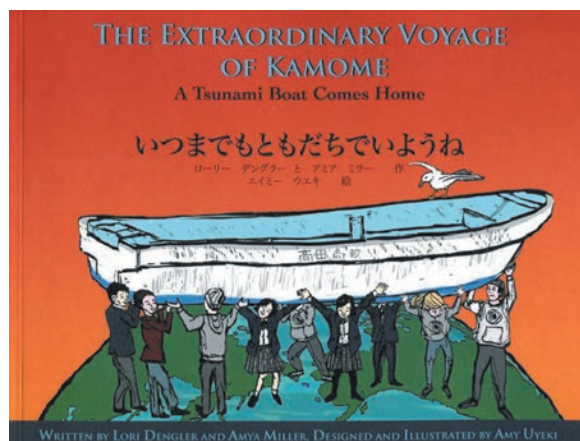

By JoAnn Bauer

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

The Extraordinary Voyage of Kamome tells the story of a Japanese panga boat washed out to sea in the 2011 tsunami. A little more than two years later, the small boat washed ashore near Crescent City, encrusted with barnacles, but otherwise intact. Characters on the side of the boat identified it as the property of a high school in Rikuzentakata, Japan, inspiring students at Del Norte High School to clean up the boat and return it to its rightful owners across the Pacific.

Artistic designer and illustrator Amy Uyeki's sketches are enhanced by using a Wacom tablet and stylus to draw thick black outlines and layer the colors for a woodblock-print feel. The design of this beautiful picture book reflects the journey from disaster to new beginnings. The first page is a full spread illustration of the Pacific Ocean with Japan to the east and Crescent City to the west. Light blue spaces on either side of the page hold the text in English and Japanese, introducing commonalities between the two towns. With each page, the blue tones grow darker, until the tsunami hits and the borders go black. As Kamome reaches Crescent City, the borders warm from gray to brown and finally the sunny gold of the last page.

Dengler's English text has a cadence that lends itself to reading aloud. The vocabulary is accessible to second graders, but the content of the story gives it a much wider range. The story provides suspense, mystery, inspiration and humor. A section in the back of the book provides information on dealing with similar disasters. If you read Japanese, you may notice the Japanese text is not an exact translation of the English narrative — in fact, the Japanese title is Let's Be Friends Forever. Amya Miller's translation does, however, tell the same story with sensitivity about the tsunami, which is still a traumatic reality, and an emphasis on the positive outcome of the Kamome's return.

Dengler is a geophysicist who studies seismic events and the Kamome was the first verifiable item from the tsunami to arrive on the California coast — an important scientific find. It was after Dengler posted photographs of the boat on the Rikuzentakata Facebook page that Amya Miller, the Director of Global Public Relations for the town, contacted her. Miller facilitated the return of the boat and arranged for the Del Norte students to visit their counterparts at Takata High School.

Proceeds from sales go toward future student exchanges between Del Norte and Takata high schools, as well as earthquake and tsunami outreach.

A symbol of survival and recovery, the Kamome has been on display at the Tokyo National Museum and in Nagoya, a sister city of Rikuzentakata, and Dengler is set to speak at the Tokyo National Museum's five-year memorial event on March 11. Devastation is still widespread and while people's lives will never be the same, stories like this have the power to give hope and courage. ●

When Rhonda Weidenbeck started Beck's Bakery three years ago, infusing Humboldt County with loaves of nutrient-dense artisan bread, she concurrently set the wheels of our local grain economy in motion. Rhonda's knowledge of agriculture is sophisticated beyond the already complex art of good bread and her passion for preserving the farmlands of Humboldt County is palpable. If you haven't had the opportunity to meet Rhonda yet, you can taste her commitment to the craft of traditional baking in every loaf of Beck's bread.

Rhonda credits local grain farmer

John LaBoyteuax with the inspiration for starting Beck's. Three years later, Rhonda works seven days a week to make Beck's economically viable with a small staff of invaluable employees. Beck's is a bedrock member of Humboldt Made in the way that it encompasses the entrepreneurial spirit of Humboldt County, where businesses planting roots behind the quiet of the redwood curtain must work 24/7 to see their dreams become a reality.

"People that value the community and the landscape want our products," says Rhonda. She explains how baking, selling and eating bread made from local grain will "keep Humboldt looking like Humboldt," by preserving land for grazing and creating a market for local wheat. Producers like Beck's Bakery and fellow Humboldt Made business, Alchemy Distilling, are able to buy grain from farmers like LaBoyteuax at economically viable prices. Between Beck's and Alchemy, they currently purchase 100% of the grain grown in Humboldt County.

As consumers everyone can help preserve Humboldt County's farmlands and promote our local economy with the simple act of eating Beck's bread. Look for Rhonda and her team at our local farmer's markets and find their artisan breads at the North Coast Co-op, Eureka Natural Foods, Wildberries Marketplace and select restaurants throughout Humboldt County.

All civilizations are the institutionalized appropriation by a small ruling elite of most of what is produced by the submerged classes. Their political/legal structures frequently claim to serve their subjects, but of course, then as now, they exist to protect the privileged position of a few.

HSU painters at the Westhaven Center for the Arts

by Gabrielle Gopinath

artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

Approached through fog and driving rain one recent afternoon, the unassuming Westhaven Center for the Arts rose out of the mist like a rustic scholar's retreat. Inside, a colorful blitz of paintings galvanized the space.

The tiny, somewhat out-of-the-way and absurdly charming "nonprofit gallery and grassroots community center" has been serving artists from the immediate local community since 2001 from its perch on a steep hillside among the redwoods, with a view of waves breaking at Moonstone Beach below. This month it hosts Honorable Mention, a showcase of work by students enrolled in honors and advanced painting classes at Humboldt State University. The works on display run the gamut of contemporary styles, from realism to colorful pop-naïveté to illustration saturated in pop culture.

These paintings are vastly different from one another. But as a group they feature a shared clarity of purpose and, often, a level of commitment to craft that reflects well on HSU painting professors Gina Tuzzi and Teresa Stanley. The exhibition is all over the place, but it's quite likeable.

Victor Feyling's mixed-media piece "Seven Days in the Sun" is comprised entirely of origami folds of paper in luscious colors that grade from petal pink and cream through fuchsia, violet and midnight blue. The surface is beguiling — at close range, the eye romps across an unpredictably undulating field comprised of overlapping angled planes.

Becca Baldwin's cool, thoughtful and suggestively titled "Lovely?" centers a rosette of skillfully painted trompe l'oeil satin scraps on a panel of blonde wood. The painted fragments grade imperceptibly into actual three-dimensional bits of fabric toward the center. The painting resists easy interpretation but the lustrous fabrics and muted pastel tones carry bridal connotations.

There are surreal visions here that fuse the decorous with the weird, like Leslie Padilla's meticulous watercolor and gouache illustrations. There are sarcastic

Victor Feyling's

Sun," a saturated

improvisations on pop culture, like Shane Donaldson's sparsely painted depiction of 1960s entertainer Tiny Tim dying for our sins on an aluminum cross. There are meditations on body image, like Angie Allen's nude study of a heavy model against a richly patterned backdrop. Alyssa Newton's moody urban landscape shows bar row on a quiet night, with neon lights flashing through a bank of fog. Danielle Carlson's seascape "Obsession" multiplies the perfect wave times five and stacks the long images horizontally, as though they were filmstrip frames.

Grace Indigo Franchini's trippy acrylic diptych "Altered State of Celebrate" mines a rich vein of earth-toned 1970s surrealism for the festival set, hilariously juxtaposing two colorful characters who would fit in well around these parts: a white-robed, six-eyed, vaguely E.T.-shaped guru and a headless woman whose facial features have relocated to her nude torso.

Juan Salazar's untitled painting depicts a young boy who cradles a baby on a riverbank; on the river's other side, nuclear reactors and refineries belch out toxic substances that blight the land. Salazar's picture is a meditation on environmental devastation and the spoliation of indigenous peoples' lands in his native Peru.

It appropriates elements of the composition of a famous painting from a much earlier time — "The Tempest," usually attributed to the Renaissance artist Giorgione. Both feature similarly posed figures crouching by a stream in a landscape. Both figures hold a baby in arms while an ominous storm brews in the background.

In Salazar's painting, Giorgione's lush landscape has been reduced to basics. The young mother of the Renaissance painting has disappeared. In her place, a brown-skinned boy sits alone on a riverbank, holding a small baby. The young boy's face is only visible in part, while the baby's face is not visible at all. But both figures are drawn with a delicate acuity that compels our empathy, allowing us to see tenderness in their embrace.

Honorable Mention packs a lot of content into a relatively small space, and it includes more engaging paintings than I can enumerate here. Walking through the show can be equal parts demanding and rewarding. Standing in the middle of this space, surrounded by visual clamor, you feel immersed in creative foment — as though artistic identities are coalescing around you in real time.

The show as a whole made me think about the significance of contemporary art's signature stylistic eclecticism. Critic Nicolas Bourriaud argued 10 years ago that the metaphor of remix is one of the few that can be meaningfully applied as a descriptor across the entire spectrum of contemporary art. Modernism's emphasis on innovation has been replaced by a concept-driven aesthetics of recombination. Artists are now called upon to manipulate their citations skillfully and to curate their reference points with great precision. In some ways, it is a lot like contemporary fashion. The styles of decades past are recycled in a sort of continuous churn, but forward progress has stalled — or perhaps it's just that the notion of progress has lost some of its relevance.

Honorable Mention shows at the Westhaven Center for the Arts through April 24. Gallery hours are Friday through Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m. Call 677-9493 or visit www.westhavencenter.org. ●

What's New is Old Again

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

As perhaps some of you with teenagers are accustomed, I occasionally have the pleasure of listening to pop radio stations while playing chauffeur to a 13-year-old. I know these radio stations serve the vital function of connecting the youth to new music that's coming out and, although the radio industry is not the powerhouse it used to be, it still provides invaluable support to artists. What I have to wonder about — being a cranky old man — is the shelf-life of much of this contemporary music.

A couple of weeks ago I was providing the above-mentioned taxi service and a pop song came on. As usual, I had no idea what the song was or who performed it. My daughter said something like the following in dramatic fashion: "I can't believe they're playing this song on the radio!"

I, too, could not believe "they" would play that song either, but for a different reason. Intrigued, I asked, "What's wrong with them playing this song?" to which my daughter responded, "Well, it's like a year old!"

I decided it wasn't the right time to remind her that part of my living is made by playing songs that are all over a year old — from the 20th century, no less — but what I found interesting was the subtext that these songs are all disposable and quickly provide diminishing returns to my daughter and, I'm assuming, many other fans.

It may be on the top of the charts today, but unlike a Twinkie, the rot sets in immediately. Is longevity the mark of great music? Or even art? Not every song needs to be "Bohemian Rhapsody" or "Like a Rolling Stone," but when you have an entire genre that is meant to be discarded and forgotten, is it fair to say it's more of a consumer product than art? Of course, those terms don't have to be mutually exclusive. If you can make art that sells, more power to you. In the meantime, I'll keep the dust off of "Waterloo Sunset" and "The Great Gig in the Sky" because even though they're old, they still have a lot to offer, and always will.

Thursday

Jazz is the name of the game and you have two very good options. If free and being able to drink local beer during the performance are requirements, then swagger over to the Mad River Brewery to hear locals The Low Notes. They'll start playing around 6 p.m.

If tributes to sax giants Lester Young and Coleman Hawkins are your bag, head over to HSU's Fulkerson Recital Hall at 8 p.m. Ex-Californian Michael Blake and his band Tiddy Boom will be paying homage to above-mentioned legends. With the band name a word play on The Pres' preferred drum beat, expect tunes that take some of the characteristics of each famous horn player and blend them together. Having worked with the Gil Evans Orchestra and Medeski, Martin and Wood, and contributed to the Get Shorty soundtrack, Michael is a player who knows his instrument. $15, $10 for HSU students.

Friday

It's Arts Arcata so there will be a lot of music happening all over town. Should you want to scoot up the 299 to Blue Lake after the Arcata happenings, you can see Kingfoot return to the Logger Bar at 9 p.m. for free. Starting off the show will be the fabulous Lyndsey Battle.

In Eureka, you can catch the sonic treat that is Mister Moonbeam open for fellow locals Cliff Dallas & The Death Valley Troubadours at the Palm Lounge. I'll admit it's been a while, but the last time I caught the Moonbeam, he had a sort of psychedelic-powered motorized stage rig that was part Willy Wonka and part Magic School Bus. The country stylings of the Troubadours will follow; it's a free show starting at 9 p.m.

Back in Arcata, you can hear "the best guitarist in Nashville" — so says Guitar World — JD Simo of SIMO, at Humboldt Brews at 9:30 p.m. Backed by equally talented bassist Elad Shapiro and drummer Adam Abrashoff, SIMO is red hot. The guitar takes center stage and delivers the classic '70s tone enshrined in many of our minds. JD had the honor of recording his latest release, Let Love Show the Way, with Duane Allman's guitar, which seems like a great fit. Imagine if Joe Cocker played guitar the way he sang, and sat in with either the Allman Brothers Band or Deep Purple. That might be close to what you're in store for tonight. Joining SIMO is Glorious Sons. Bring $10 to get in.

Saturday

The Fortuna Monday Club hosts locals Good Company for some toe-tappin' Irish airs and ballads. There will be violins, flutes, pennywhistles, mandolins, and dimbek and bodhran all creating the sounds of the Celtic land. Concert time is at 7:30 p.m. with a $10 cover charge.

The anything-but-Celtic funksters of Motherlode will be delivering a rare free show in the "sea air" of Blue Lake. Around 9 p.m. at the Logger Bar, get your local funk and groove on.

Farm-Aid rockers Insects vs. Robots will be making a stop in Arcata following a gig in Medford and before they hit San Rafael. Expect songs from their new release Stupid Dreams, and tunes dealing with laser beams and the implosion of the Earth. A perfect soundtrack for an election season. Joining them at Humboldt Brews at 9:30 p.m. will be local rockers Cold Blue Water. Last time I saw CBW, they delivered an insanely impressive medley of classic rock standards, and I hear they've returned from recording sessions at Robby Krieger's studio in L.A. $10 gets you in.

Sunday

I've had the pleasure of meeting Dee Hemingway recently, and from what I've heard from her many fans around town — and recordings online — Dee can sing. Witness it for yourself as she'll be at the Lighthouse Grill in Trinidad with Eric Hann at 5 p.m. performing for free.

Based out of New York City and Seattle, The Tipton Saxophone Quartet will be at The Arcata Playhouse at 8 p.m. Featuring a quartet of saxes (as the name implies), the TSQ is rounded out by drummer Tarik Abouzied, who compliments the horn-heavy lineup. In existence for close to 20 years, the band knows how to deliver an engaging live performance; plus, when's the last time you saw a sax quartet? $18 for this one.

Tuesday

Sticking with the Arcata Playhouse, you can catch cult-status superstar Jonathan Richman tonight at 8 p.m. Jonathan's early work with the Modern Lovers would foreshadow the punk movement, but wouldn't pigeonhole him into that genre in the slightest. Clever, insightful and occasionally goofy lyrics have cemented him into the hearts and minds of millions. You've seen him in Something about Mary — see him in the flesh for $22 at the Playhouse.

Wednesday

One of Humboldt's newest venues — which is landing some pretty impressive acts as of late — The Old Steeple in Ferndale brings you, "all the way out from Iowa", Greg Brown. The singer-songwriter has visited Humboldt County many times, but tonight — assuming you already have a ticket to this sold-out show — you'll have a chance for an intimate performance at 8 p.m. ●

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Andy Powell is a congenital music lover and hosts The Night Show on KWPT 100.3 FM weeknights at 6 p.m. Art gets old, but it never dies.

The Horror Express

All aboard the Horror Express for a night of mystery and terror at the Arcata Theater Lounge on Wednesday, March 16 at 7:30 p.m. (free with $5 food/beverage purchase). Two of the genre's greats, Christopher Lee and Peter Cushing, go off the rails on a crazy train (the Trans-Siberian Express) trying to find their creepy cargo: a frozen pre-human creature who comes up missing as bodies turn up dead.

Courtesy of the Golden Rule Committee

Perhaps you'd like a more peaceful mode of transport? For $75 or $250/group (limited to four people), you can sail across Humboldt Bay on the fully restored peace boat, the Golden Rule. It sets sail the next two weekends, March 12 and 13, and March 19 and 20 at noon, 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. at the Foot of C Street dock in Eureka.

Courtesy of the Humboldt Pie Fundraiser

Um, you've got a little something right there... Take home cash prizes and a belly full of deliciousness at the Humboldt Pie Fundraiser on March 12 from noon to 3 p.m. at the Wharfinger Building (free admission). Enter pie competitions and pie eating contests, let the kids cram their faces full of ice cream and burn off the sugar at the kids' activities table, and leave full of sweet feelings because all proceeds benefit Tri-County Independent Living.

The Good Wolf

The Arcata Playhouse's Family Fun Series opens this weekend with the award-winning Australian Windmill Theatre's Big Bad Wolf on Friday, March 11 at 7 p.m. and March 12 at 2 and 7 p.m. ($12, $10 kids 12 and under).

This year, the Playhouse celebrates 10 years of bringing kids to the theater and the theater to the kids, at schools and at the playhouse, through its Family Fun Series. And the kick-off show is something else.

The story is an unusual take on a classic fairy tale character. The Big Bad Wolf's not bad, you see, he's simply misunderstood. As another Animal once sang, he's just a soul whose intentions are good, but people can't get past his scary appearance (he has yellow eyes and is a bit long in the tooth). Thankfully, one girl sees that he is, in fact, just a lamb in wolf's clothing, and the two of them develop a charming connection. Through song, dance, puppetry and humor, the mismatched pair discovers that true friendship knows no size, shape or species.

Bring the kids (suitable for ages 5 and up) to this colorful show and keep your eye on the marquee. The series continues through April and May with troupes coming our way from Portland and San Francisco.

Melodramatic

The students at Dell'Arte International School of Physical Theatre have been digging deep for the strongest emotions and gut-wrenching moments. Sound a bit over the top? Intense? That's melodrama. And it's on display this weekend in Blue Lake.

Dell'Arte's first year ensemble leaves it all on the stage during Blood and Thunder: Melodrama Lives from Thursday, March 17 to Saturday, March 19 at 8 p.m. in the Carlo Theatre (donation). The presentation is the culmination of five weeks of study with Dell'Arte master teachers Lauren Wilson, Michael Fields and James Peck, and guest teacher Evamarie Johnson. For Blood and Thunder, students created original short plays examining the highs and lows of being in the throes of love and hatred, loyalty and jealousy, hope and revenge, tyranny and cruelty. Heightened by music and the use of exaggeration or hyperbole, the stories show how the human spirit confronts, lives with and ultimately triumphs over adversity. See how it all plays out this weekend. Don't let cash keep you away — it's pay what you can. These kids understand the struggle is real.

On the Outs

Outside Mullingar
at Redwood Curtain
Theatre

By David Jervis

frontrow@northcoastjournal.com

The people and legacy of Ireland have long loomed large in literature, cinema and the stage. So much so, that with its elements of sorrow, longing, upheaval and loss, it can risk veering into well-trod territory, or even cliché, never mind that these are vital moving parts to the historical character of the people. And through the view of American audiences looking at the page, the screen or the stage, what comes to the mind's eye is more the Irish-American experience, such as in the works of Eugene O'Neill, than the Emerald Isle.

Which is where John Patrick Shanley's Outside Mullingar, directed by Kristin L. Mack at Redwood Curtain, takes an interesting sidestep, telling a modern story that's timelessly Irish, with elements particular to the nation and at the same time universal. No mean feat that, but Shanley, a Tony and Pulitzer winner for Doubt (which was staged outstandingly in 2010 by North Coast Repertory Theatre) is up to the task. Mullingar, which had a Broadway run five years back, was inspired when Shanley, born and bred in New York City, visited the Irish farm where his father was raised.

The play opens in the Irish midlands. Tony Reilly (Jerry Nussbaum) doesn't plan to leave the family farm to his son Anthony (Craig Benson), and tells him as much as we first meet them, returning from the wake of Christopher Muldoon, owner of the adjacent farmland. Tony just doesn't feel that his son takes the same joy in farming that he did, and thinks him not up to the task, even though it's quite clear that Anthony is relentlessly hardworking, feeling at home and doing his best thinking out in the pastureland.

Next door at the Muldoons are the widow Aoife (Elisa Abelleria) and her daughter Rosemary (an excellent Pamela Long), and the same question of land inheritance. Rosemary is a pipe-smoking, outspoken free spirit who still resents Anthony pushing her into the mud on a strip of land between the families' farms back when they were children. The mud-pushing fracas is one of a couple good running jokes throughout the story, and not the only one that turns out to be very telling all the way to the play's end.

The fates of Anthony and Rosemary as they must live with the uneasy dynamic of being neighbors and figuring out what to do with their farms is a fine underpinning to the story, and Shanley's dialogue is sharp. The repartee is both comedic and romantic, and it's great without calling attention to itself. Benson and Long have great energy together, and the nimble four-person cast works especially well in Redwood Curtain's intimate setting. While some great Irish-isms fly ("You're half woman, ya are," "He had the blood of kings in 'im") the play is much more focused on the life choices that face people such as Anthony and Rosemary. And despite all the talk of hay bales and the great rain sound effects by the crew under Mack's direction, we get a glimpse of a 21st-century Ireland, one in which the characters drink not whiskey but tea (and one very pivotal bottle of Guinness) and there is talk of the demise of the "Celtic Tiger," the Irish economic boom that collapsed so drastically in the mid-aughts.

If perhaps Shanley's story doesn't always blaze into wildly original territory, that's more than made up for by the poignant moments in the story, which never lags or has a wasted word. It's a tale of heart and insight, and on the evening I saw it, there was nothing more fitting than arriving in a driving downpour and departing during a break in the rain. I'd recommend seeing it within the same circumstances, but that one's out of our hands, really.

Outside Mullingar plays at Redwood Curtain Theatre in Eureka on Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m., with a Sunday matinee at 2 p.m. Call 443-7688 or visit www.redwoodcurtain.com.

War Zoned

*Whiskey Tango
Foxtrot and London
Has Fallen*

By John J. Bennett

Reviews

WHISKEY TANGO FOXTROT. Tina Fey possesses a charm, a screen presence that I find irresistible. She manifests an every-woman allure, despite the fact that she is smarter, more attractive and more ambitious than average by at least a couple of derivations. Her self-awareness, trending so often to self-deprecation, plays against her attributes sympathetically, without seeming inauthentic or supercilious. Her television show 30 Rock, in which she presumably played a klutzier, lonelier version of herself, was perhaps her greatest showcase as an actor. As a writer and producer, of course, Fey is a force with which to be reckoned, from Saturday Night Live to 30 Rock, to The Unbreakable Kimmy Schmidt, with some screenplays peppered in. She has generated some of her strongest work when collaborating with Robert Carlock, who gets screenplay by credit here for adapting Kim Barker's memoir The Taliban Shuffle: Strange Days in Afghanistan and Pakistan. All of which is a long-winded way of saying that I expected to like Whiskey Tango Foxtrot — and I did — but it is not without shortcomings.

Fey plays Kim Baker, a news-industry veteran in a rut, relegated to writing copy for the anchors on a network show. Uninspired by her work or her healthy-enough, ultimately bland relationship, she accepts a 90-day posting to Afghanistan, circa 2003, just to shake things up a little. Not surprisingly, the transition is tricky, but Baker quickly adapts to life in wartime, and weeks stretch into months and into years. She starts getting airtime with her stories, befriends hard-charging sexpot Tanya Vanderpoel (Margot Robbie), drinks too much and generally embraces her new life as a hard-bitten, devil-may-care war reporter. Meanwhile, of course, she's blowing up her previous real life in New York and, as public perception of the war in Afghanistan begins to shift, she's losing

In the moment, Whiskey Tango Foxtrot feels immediate and compelling. Fey, Robbie and the rest of the cast, including Martin Freeman and Billy Bob Thornton, portray their characters with sympathy and dimension. It isn't difficult to get caught up in the narrative, just as Baker gets caught up in the rush of combat reportage. When the smoke clears, though, the movie doesn't leave as significant an impression as one might think. In its headlong charge, it pauses for brief moments of insight and contemplation that feel forced when played against the freewheeling bulk of the movie. Secondary characters pop up to deliver important messages, shocking violence intrudes — as much as these things make sense in their senselessness, placed in the context of war, they just don't quite fit into this movie as they should. This is a shame because Whiskey Tango Foxtrot does have something to add to the ongoing conversation about war correspondence, about the addictive nature of combat both for combatants and observers, and about the ever-dwindling level of public interest in honest, accurate live-fire reporting. And not to bury the lede, but we should celebrate the fact that this story is told from the point of view of a strong and capable female protagonist. Taken as a whole, though, the movie is blandly satisfying where I wish it were resonant and unsettling. That has as much to do with my predilections as it does with the actualities of Whiskey Tango Foxtrot, but I still think opportunities were missed. R. 111M. BROADWAY.

LONDON HAS FALLEN. Periodically, throughout modern Hollywood history, rival studios will release competing blockbusters with nearly identical subjects. This arms race has given us the dubious pleasure of foils like Armageddon and Deep Impact (1998), Volcano and Dante's Peak (1997), and more recently, White House Down and Olympus Has Fallen (2013). I saw neither but would have bet good money that the one starring Channing Tatum and Jamie Foxx would have had longer legs. I would have lost that bet, as audiences somehow seem to prefer their president in peril disaster movies to star Gerard Butler and Aaron Eckhart; who knew? (Although, I should have guessed that the notion of a black president wouldn't play well with the American public.)

In this sequel Butler again plays Mike Banning, the decidedly one-dimensional secret service agent at President Bejamin Asher's (Eckhart) right hand. Banning and his wife have a baby on the way, and he's laboring over a letter of resignation. Meanwhile, deep in the desert, an American drone strike decimates the family of international arms dealer Amir Barkawi (Alon Aboutboul) on the day of his daughter's wedding. This does not sit well with Barkawi, so he uses the London funeral of the British prime minister as an opportunity to assassinate most of the heads of state in the G8, with his intended coup de grace being the live-streaming execution of President Asher. Of course, Banning can't let that happen and so there follows a protracted shoot 'em up with very few distinguishing characteristics.

London Has Fallen seems to intentionally circumvent the current global conversation regarding terrorism, violence, religious fundamentalism, etc. This conspicuous omission makes the movie ring all the more false, especially when Banning starts spouting meaningless "don't tread on me" drivel while beating brown people to death. *PG13. 127M. The tax-defaulted properties listed below are subject to the Tax Collector's power of sale and have been approved for sale by a resolution dated February 9th 2016 of the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors.

The sale will be conducted at www.bid4assets.com, from April 22nd 2016 through April 25th 2016 as a public auction to the highest bidder for not less than the minimum bid as shown on this notice. Parcels receiving no bids will be re-offered at www.bid4assets.com on June 10th through 13th 2016 at a minimum price appropriate to stimulate competitive bidding. Research the item prior to bidding. Due diligence research is incumbent on the bidder. The winning bidder is legally obligated to purchase the item.

Only bids submitted via the Internet will be accepted. Pre-registration is required. Register on-line at Bid4Assets.com by April 15th 2016. Bidders must submit a refundable deposit of $2,500.00 electronically, certified check or money order at www.bid4assets.com. The deposit will be applied to the successful bidder's purchase price. Full payment and deed information indicating how title should be vested is required within 48 hours after the end of the sale. Terms of payment are limited to wire transfers, certified checks or money orders. A California transfer tax will be added to and collected with the purchase price and is calculated at $.55 per each $500 or fraction thereof.

The Martellus Map

Part 1 of 2

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

In February 1970, two days after arriving in Canada, I was sitting in an employment office in Vancouver.

The guy on the other side of the desk said, "There's an opening at Indian Affairs. Would you be interested?" Sure, I thought, naively anticipating that I'd be working with Hindus. I only realized later the Indians in question were the folks now mostly referred to as Native, Indigenous or First Nations people. We can blame Christopher Columbus and the mapmakers he trusted for the "Indian" moniker, starting with a polymath who lived in Alexandria, Egypt in the second century.

Claudius Ptolemy was a Greco-Egyptian mathematician, astronomer and geographer whose map-making skills were used by navigators well over a thousand years after his death in 170 AD. His greatest accomplishment was the Geography, in which Ptolemy combined maps of the known world, a gazetteer of 8,000 places listed by latitude and longitude, and a treatise on cartography including, crucially, how to project the Earth's curved surface onto a flat piece of paper.

By the time his work resurfaced in Constantinople about 1300 AD, the maps had been lost, but Renaissance cartographers were able to reconstruct them from his gazetteer. In looking at the results, it's obvious that Ptolemy greatly overestimated the width of Eurasia. Instead of the true value of 130°, his map spanned 180° from Britain in the west to China in the east, while omitting the coast. It was only in 1295, when Marco Polo returned from his astonishing travels in Asia, that "Cipangu," as the Chinese called Japan, was made known to Europeans.

One of the first maps to incorporate Polo's knowledge was Hendricus Martellus' world map of 1491. The problem was that Marco Polo's chronicles gave very vague descriptions of geography ("... this city is five days camel journey east of that one ...") so places are only loosely located, including Japan, which he didn't visit.

In addition to showing Japan (located much farther east than its actual location), Martellus' map is the first post-Ptolemy map 1467 map by Jacob d'Angelo, based on Ptolemy's Geographia, showing lines of latitude and longitude. Note that the map ends west of the coast of China.

Wikimedia Commons

to incorporate latitude and longitude. This made it possible for Christopher Columbus to (under-) estimate the distance from the Canary Isles to Japan in his quest to find a westerly route to the "Indies."

As well as the longitudinal problem, Columbus underestimated the size of our planet. He took Earth's circumference to be 18,800 miles (rather than its actual value of 25,000 miles) due to confusion between "Arabic" and "Roman" miles. Or he may have known the true value, but chose to go along with a smaller one. Why? Because funding for his original trans-Atlantic voyage depended on his backers believing that the distance from the Canary Islands to Japan — and hence "Indies" — to be no more than 2,300 of our miles; it's actually 7,800 miles. Whatever doubts he may have had, he kept them to himself when he approached the rulers of first Portugal, then Spain, for funds.

Fortunately for him — not so fortunately for the natives he encountered — his expedition made landfall in the Bahamas off the coast of what would soon be called America after the Italian navigator Amerigo Vesputci. Still, Columbus thought he'd found the Indies — the name then given to all the lands of eastern Asia — so he called the local populace "Indians." Which somehow stuck, even after his error was discovered. (An alternative theory that "Indians," Spanish Indios, came from "la gente en Dios," the people of God, is almost certainly wrong.)

Next time, we'll look at the Martellus Map, whose "invisible ink" was recently brought to light at Yale University. ●

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) quit Canada's Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development after reading Alan Fry's How a People Die. It's still in print.
